MEDIA STATEMENT

Site Structure for Planned Independent Agriculture Company Recognizes Combined History and Expertise

DES MOINES, Iowa, Feb. 19, 2016 Earlier today, DuPont (NYSE:DD) and The Dow Chemical Company (NYSE:DOW) announced the U.S. site structure for the global agricultural leader they intend to create following the planned separation of DowDuPont into three standalone companies. DuPont Pioneer President Paul Schickler issued the following statement:

The U.S. site structure for the leading Agriculture company DuPont and Dow intend to create recognizes the significant history and expertise of both companies in three locations. I am proud of the role Iowa, the Pioneer Johnston campus and our people around the world will play in the intended Agriculture company.

Ninety years ago, Henry A. Wallace founded what is now DuPont Pioneer in order to bring new technology to farmers. Although the Johnston farmland where he started out looks different, the focus and passion of the people working here today is the same. Pioneer is a globally recognized and respected brand, thanks in large part to the fact we still put farmers first and have built industry-leading expertise in plant breeding, seed production and agronomics.

Now, our historic location and top-notch people are poised to be part of a historic evolution in agribusiness. The proposed Agriculture company will leverage the collective and unique assets of both Dow and DuPont in Delaware, Indiana and Iowa, setting us up to deliver more innovation and choice for farmers. Personally, I am proud of what we have accomplished and am looking forward to the future.
