this discussion w the forward-look	ill include forward	l-looking statement e factors that could	s and that actual pl	lans or results could	d differ materially f	losure. I d like to re rom those expressed 2015 Annual Report	or implied in press release on Apormation about Abl			ion with St. Jude. P.	lease refer to pages	5 and 6 of that

So, Brian, let s just start with the elephant in the room, Alere and St. Jude. I understand you re limited in what you can say, but I m sure investors would love to hear your latest thoughts on each of those deals in light of the Alere lawsuit and the St. Jude s cyber security issues raised by

Brian Yoor - Abbott Labs - SVP and CFO

With respect to St. Jude, again, I d point you to what they ve been saying publicly. I think something was just put out this morning on their position. I can t speak personally to that. You have to reach out to St. Jude for that. I think also, too, you can point to the other third party assessments that have been done with respect to Muddy Waters, et cetera.

We continue to work very collaboratively with St. Jude to advance the transaction. The integration is going very well. The management teams are very collaborative working together, and we just look forward to creating, again, the premier medical device company that want, this combination of competence between Abbott and St. Jude with a leading position clearly in the cardiovascular neuromodular space.

Larry Biegelsen - Wells Fargo Securities - Analyst

Thanks. And with regard to the St. Jude deal, are you still on track to close the deal by year-end, and what are the remaining outstanding events before the deal closes?

Brian Yoor - Abbott Labs - SVP and CFO

Yes, we re still on track to close the deal to management. The teams, as I said, are working very well together. There s been a second request that s out there from the SEC. We ll have to let that process unfold. I mean, that s not uncommon with a transaction of this size. But what we have, really, is two very complementary companies coming together, so there s nothing that would cause me to say we re having a concern that we re not on track here, and we expect to continue to close this by the end of the year.

Larry Biegelsen - Wells Fargo Securities - Analyst

And St. Jude s results in the second quarter were in line with their guidance of about 2% pro forma growth. So far it seems like there hasn t been any disruption from the deal. How confident are you that we won t see disruptions from the integration?

Brian Yoor - Abbott Labs - SVP and CFO

Yes. Well, it s good to the see the stabilization, Larry, in their performance. If you look at their results, they had very strong international results and also very strong results in what we know to be the high-growth area that we re interested in as well, be that in atrial fibrillation in their space that they participate in the LVAD states with HeartMate and also in the neuromodulation space.

So these high-growth areas will continue to manifest themselves. We expect that to continue as we move through to completing this acquisition and become one company. And then also we know that we want to see that stabilization in the CRM business ops. They have an MRI stake claim that they re working towards, and that should play out as we exit 2016 and move into 2017. But, clearly, they ve shown a track record that where they have this claim from an MRI space label in Europe and Japan, but they ve been otherwise able to stabilize share.

Broadly speaking, and this is important to note, St. Jude participates in a weighted average market that s growing, call it, 3% to 4%, so not uncommon with the markets that Abbott participates in. And so as a company combined with a stronger foundation together and our approach to the market, we would see that, going forward, the combined companies would have inline growth that s very commensurate to that which you see from Abbott today.

Larry Biegelsen - Wells Fargo Securities - Analyst

How quickly do you think the St. Jude business could get back to that kind of market growth and reaching double digit growth?

Brian Yoor - Abbott Labs - SVP and CFO

I think we re a little conservative for maybe what the analyst side I think the analyst side likes 5%, 6% out of the gate. We re a little bit more realistic in how we ease into that, so I think, you know, let that play out over the course of the year and how we ramp it up.

Larry Biegelsen - Wells Fargo Securities - Analyst

That s helpful. I wanted to ask a question on capital allocation. Scanning the room for hands and feel free if you have a question. So you re taking out a lot of new debt with the St. Jude deal. Can you talk about your capital allocation priorities after the deal? Pre-St. Jude, I think your debt-to-EBITDA was about 2x. With St. Jude, we estimate it will be closer to 4x excluding Alere. So what s your target debt-to-EBITDA ratio post-St. Jude deal and how quickly can you get there?

Brian Yoor - Abbott Labs - SVP and CFO

Sure. Well, we ve been very public about this and, again, under the assumption of both transactions closing, which our financing contemplates, we probably stated that, out of the gate, we would be at a 4.5x ratio of debt-to-EBITDA, that we would implement a de-leveraging plan to bring that down to at least 3.5 by 2018. So that s all out there in the public domain.

the pace of growth	h may be modera $1 billion and $2	ted a bit. With respe	ect to share buybac	k, and we ve seen	this, we ve been v	dentity, but we probab ery active over the pa vould otherwise be de	st few years,

With respect to th	e synergies on St	. Jude, we talked ab	out that. We expec	t a revenue synergy	y. Those will build	more, over time. Thin	k of those

And then, finally, you have just the basic G&A synergies where you re going after the elimination of redundancies there. What will happen as the synergies ramp to the target we had of about 500 million. It will happen in a linear fashion, but it s more likely that you ll see expense synergies more heavy weighed on the front end with revenue synergies building as we move out through the three years.

as about 25% of the total synergies we expect to achieve in the coming years, and then we expect gross margin synergies where we have shown again the ability of Abbott, and will do so again with St. Jude, to find those network opportunities in the supply chain to improve gross margins.

Those were another 25%.

Larry Biegelsen - Wells Fargo Securities - Analyst
Perfect. So we re about a minute over, so we ll conclude. Brian and Mike, thank you very much for coming out today.
Brian Yoor - Abbott Labs - SVP and CFO
Thank you.
Larry Biegelsen - Wells Fargo Securities - Analyst
Thanks, everybody.
