TRANSCRIPT OF CNBC INTERVIEW WITH EDWARD D. BREEN AND ANDREW N. LIVERIS

DECEMBER 11, 2015

DAVID FABER: These businesses know they're going to be independently traded, and let's call it three years from today or something along those lines. What incentive do they have, Andrew, then to, to, to keep performing well over this period, instead of sort of keeping things okay but waiting until they become public to really ramp it up for their management teams and the like?

ANDREW LIVERIS: Because neither he nor I will allow it. (laughs)

ED BREEN: Yeah, there's another answer to that too. I've been through this before, splitting up FICO

DAVID FABER: With the split of FICO

ED BREEN: into five different companies. And it's very easy. You say to the management team, and especially the person that's gonna run it, you don't get to be the CEO and the CFO of the public company if you don't do a good job right now.

DAVID FABER: And you haven't decided

ED BREEN: And it's a big motivator.

DAVID FABER: You have not decided yet who will be the CEOs of these respective companies?

ED BREEN: We, we will do that with at least six months' notice from the time of separation. That's... Hopefully before that even, but no later than six months.

DAVID FABER: Ah, go ahead, sir (?)

ANDREW LIVERIS: David... no, just want to make it clear that we're motivated to set it up so that we can answer your question on the people side, the talent, the... all the people that have to be staff(ed). I'm not motivated to be the person on the outbound at all. This is an incredible value-creating deal. If you want to call it fulfilling of a legacy, do whatever you want. We've been working on this for ten years at Dare (?) 1:10. If we set it up right, put the right people in place, okay, there's nothing that says... and I'll speak for myself... that I'm the outbound person. We have to select the best person, inside or outside, to get these jobs done.

ED BREEN: That's right.

Edgar Filing: DUPONT E I DE NEMOURS & CO - Form 425

ANDREW LIVERIS: for the future, not just getting the synergies. We're motivated to get the synergies and get rid of the spins.

DAVID FABER: I want to turn back to the N.Y.C. Of course, Jim Cramer, who you both know well, has a few questions. Jim, take it away.

JIM CRAMER: Yeah, sure. I'm trying to figure out the role of activism in this. I know Mr. Beam was speaking about the idea that, when Alan Cohen (?) was there, he had studied this. How much did Trian have to do this, with this? Were they instrumental at all Nelson Peltz's organization? Because it seems to be and when, when the stock was at 55, he was saying, please do not give up on DuPont. There are things that go right. And I know from Mr. Liveris, I know that Dan Wogue (?) 1:59 was in your company, and whether I managed to have two board members on one (?) how much of it is just people within saying big shareholders this would be great, and you listening to the big shareholders?

DAVID FABER: Why don't we start with Trian's role if with, with DuPont?

ED BREEN: Yeah, well, you know, since as I came in as the CEO, I've had a dialogue with Nelson and Ed. And it's been very constructive. You know, I'm glad DuPont didn't do something a year ago, because this is really the best deal. I mean, we looked at every possibility, analyzed every one financially. There's nothing that financially compares to the value creation for a DuPont shareholder anywhere near this deal that we just announced. So I'm really happy we got to this point and can transact this deal. Ah, so but I've been talking to Trian. And by the way, about two or three weeks ago I did ask them to sign an NDA. And we brought them under the tent and got their advice on it. Obviously very, very supportive of us doing this deal, and actually also thought it was the best transaction by far that could have occurred. And one other thing I'll say in conversations with Trian and this is true with our other investors they asked a lot about, how is the growth going to work in these three companies? Very concerned about building these companies up, protecting the R&D, and really thinking long term about the future. And I really appreciate, appreciated that in my conversations with them.

DAVID FABER: Mr. Loeb has a standstill that expires fairly soon, to Jim's question. Did he was that at all, did that at all figure into how you went about doing it? Is it a pure coincidence, you announced this on the Friday when the standstill expires Monday?

ANDREW LIVERIS: I wish I was that good, David, that we could bring together this massive transformation of Dow and DuPont and also, by the way, we announced the Dow-Corning deal today

DAVID FABER: Yes.

ANDREW LIVERIS: So, in its own right, if this was not a Dow-DuPont announcement, that deal itself would get a lot of attention. Could I put together two deals like that to arrive on the day before a standstill expiration? I think you'd have to be, you know, thinking I was a magician to do it. I'm not. So these, these are ten-year discussions for us. And ten-year discussions that got accelerated in the last three or four years because of the Ag site. And clearly, Third Point had a view on the Ag site as well. And I would bow to them, and I would bow. Look, I met Nelson Peltz a year ago. Nelson had a lot of great ideas about this very conversation. I'm very out there with the shareholders, as has been reported. We've listened to all of our shareholders. I believe Third Point gets a major win out of this, because they get to see the clarity of the company we're creating. Which is, I think, what activists really want. They really want to understand the clarity of the value thesis. I will let Ed speak for DuPont. There was some mix-up about the Dow value thesis. And we, as a board, have been marching down this path. Last five years, we've divested thirteen billion of revenue, okay. We just got out of our chlorine business

DAVID FABER: Yup.

ANDREW LIVERIS: which we've been in for 118 years. So, this deal was always to be had. This deal was always there. And every investor, including activist investors and, and I Third Point, who we settled with DAVID FABER: Yes, you did.

ANDREW LIVERIS: And their two directors, by the way great directors, fiduciary duty, doing the right thing this is a unanimous approval to get this deal done.

DAVID FABER: Jim?

JIM CRAMER: Yeah. Andrew, you know, we've talked many times about how I felt that Dow Chemical should have been a sixty, sixty-five dollar stock. Multiple's wrong. You became the fastest-growing low-cost producer. Ed Breen, I have said over and over again, the amount of money. Ed Breen, I have said over and over again, the amount of money you created at Tyco was extraordinary. I feel you've got the best Ag business. I'd take yours over Monsanto. I look at specialty products. I love and get (?) Tuleen, Tuleen, please don't take this personally, because I know you love the show 5:40 but this is a rival to that. Material sciences, low-cost producer, fastest grower. The market is making some sort of weird judgment. Andrew, your stock people are saying you could have gotten to a higher price by yourself is that what the market's saying? Or does the market just not understand the synergies and not understand the three companies and not understand how much value both of you have created in your careers?

ANDREW LIVERIS: Well, look, the market on the rumor really traded us both up equally. I think we shouldn't judge it on a day or a moment. We have a lot of work we've got to do. The synergy number is powerful, Jim. And the synergy number will be delivered. Both Ed and I feel it's conservative. And we also feel we can get the synergy number and get it quick. And so that is really important. And we'll be out there talking to all of our investors. And really obviously we see the power of that number. We could never have done that on our own. Just by coming together, we'll get that synergy number.

DAVID FABER: We can hear the sound of starting up at the Exchange. So we only have a couple of minutes before the opening bell. But this point of, well, why not have just self-help? You know, why not have split Dow the way you are now in the future, would have been a lot of quicker, and conceivably you could have gotten it done in a more expeditious fashion. Why was that not a preferred (inaudible simultaneous speakers)?

ED BREEN: Well, let me answer part of that too, and then Andrew. This deal, you got to understand, is the most tax-efficient way to put the pieces together properly. There's no tax. So by us putting the business together, we did not just fix the Ag issue, which creates the world-leading Ag company as Jim just mentioned. But we now create a specialty company that's going to have a nice multiple trading against it. And Dow puts the right pieces from DuPont into where they belong. And we had the same issue at DuPont. A lot of confusion about, how do you value all these different pieces. So we fixed three strategy pieces all at once. Then we have the synergies on top of it. Then we have our growth plans on top of that all tax efficiently. And that's not easy to normally do.

DAVID FABER: Right.

ANDREW LIVERIS: So it's an accelerant. It's an accelerant or propellant. By being together, we can get bigger synergy numbers than being apart.

DAVID FABER: Yup.

ANDREW LIVERIS: Yes, we did self-help, but nothing like this size.

DAVID FABER: Finally, sort of this idea of who's going to be running these individual units. I mean, you mentioned you're not necessarily going to be outbound. Do you know what you'd like your role to be

ANDREW LIVERIS: Well

DAVID FABER: Once, let's call it, once this closes and the 18-to-24 months has taken place? Are you, are you done?

ANDREW LIVERIS: No, the executive chairman role and the CR (?) role is very clearly spelled out. I've got direction to set up materials. Ed's got direction to set up Ag and specialties, from our boards. The boards will obviously decide. The space pace of that, we hope to get it done as fast as possible. Look, I, I've had a tremendous opportunity to be CEO of the Dow Chemical Company. The vision to get us here has been a board-driven vision. And I'm very happy that once we close this deal, execute and put the plan in place to get the deal launched okay, the spins then we will make the right succession decision. And there's no need for me to be that person.

DAVID FABER: Right. So Jim Gallogly, a board member who ran Lyondell is it possible he'll run materials?

ED BREEN: Jim, Jim is a great board member and I talk to him all the time and obviously loves and understands this industry. But, but Jim's also 63 years old.

DAVID FABER: Okay. Gentlemen, we have to leave it there. I could go on for a long time. (laughter) But thank you for taking the time of course on this day. And I'm sure you'll get some rest at some point. Andrew Liveris, CEO of Dow Chemical; Ed Breen, CEO of DuPont soon to be Dow-DuPont.

ED BREEN: You got it, yup.

DAVID FABER: All right. Thank you, guys.
