DOCOMO to begin considering submitting an application for a plan to establish 1.7GHz Band and 3.4GHz Band Specified Base Stations

NTT DOCOMO, INC. (the Company) announced that the Company has started considering submitting an application for a plan to establish Specified Base Stations in connection with the Proposed Guidelines for Establishment Plans for Specified Base Stations for Diffusion of 4G Mobile Communications Systems announced by the Ministry of Internal Affairs and Communications on November 17, 2017.

If the Company submits an application and its application is approved, based on the proposed guidelines provided by the Ministry of Internal Affairs and Communications, the Company estimates that it will incur up to 273 billion yen* in expenses required for the migration of the licensees currently using the relevant frequency band and other required related expenses.

*According to the proposed guidelines, the maximum possible migration cost is as stated below.

The Company's expenses are dependent on the number of frequency bands that are certified and the number of certified operators, and the Company has started considering submitting an application based on the assumption that the Company will incur the maximum possible expense of 273 billion yen.

1.7GHz: Maximum amount of 210 billion yen to be borne by a maximum of 3 operators

3.4GHz: Maximum amount of 62 billion yen to be borne by a maximum of 2 operators
