Subject: Conexant to be Acquired by SMSC

Today we announced a definitive agreement to sell our company to Standard Microsystems Corporation (SMSC). Under the terms of the agreement, SMSC will acquire Conexant for $2.25 per share – half in cash and half in stock. The transaction is valued at approximately $284 million including the assumption of our net debt. Completion of the transaction is expected to occur in the first half of calendar 2011 after the satisfaction of regulatory requirements, approval by our stockholders, and other customary closing conditions. This will conclude the final chapter of our history as an independent company and mark the beginning of a new era for our team.

Founded in 1971, SMSC (NASDAQ: SMSC) is a fabless semiconductor company that employs analog and mixed-signal technology to design connectivity solutions for computing, consumer, automotive, and industrial applications. The company is headquartered in New York and has approximately 1,000 employees, with offices and research facilities in North America, Asia, Europe, and India.

Earlier today, SMSC announced financial results for its November-ending third quarter of fiscal 2011 that included record revenues of $107 million, non-GAAP gross margin of 55.4 percent of revenues, and non-GAAP earnings per share of 52 cents. SMSC is also debt-free, with $188.5 million in cash and investments as of November 30, 2010. More information on the company is available at www.smsc.com.

So why did we decide selling our company was the best way forward? Put simply, we'll be stronger with SMSC than we would have been going it alone. In our industry, size and scope provide significant advantages with customers and suppliers. While we have made outstanding progress across many fronts over the past several years, we have also gotten smaller, which increases business and execution risk. By joining forces with a larger company that shares core competencies in analog and mixed-signal design, possesses a complementary product portfolio, and counts many customers in common, we get the opportunity to take advantage of economies of scale, drive profitable growth, and achieve an even higher level of success over time.

We still have work to do to complete the transaction. Until then, it's business as usual for all of us.

Once the transaction closes, I will not continue in an executive capacity with the combined company. It's been an honor and privilege to serve as your leader for nearly three years. During that time, we divested our Broadband Media Processing and Broadband Access businesses, significantly improved our financial and business performance, and completed the financial restructuring of our company. Thank you for your hard work, perseverance, and dedication. Without your efforts, we could not have accomplished what we did.

I am pleased to announce that we expect Sailesh Chittipeddi, currently Conexant president and chief operating officer, to become executive vice president of the combined company when the transaction closes, with responsibility for all product lines, worldwide engineering, and marketing. In his new role, Sailesh will report to Chris King, SMSC president and chief executive officer.

While change can be unsettling, I am convinced selling our company now is the right move at the right time.

Prospects for the combined company, expected to have annual revenues in excess of $600 million, are outstanding.

Let's embrace this opportunity with enthusiasm, and remember that our most important ongoing priority—delivering innovative new solutions that contribute to the success of our customers—remains the same.

Chris King will join Sailesh and me for an all-hands meeting with Conexant employees in the U.S. and Europe today at 9:30 a.m. Pacific time, and a meeting with our Asia employees will follow on January 13. We look forward to providing you with more information and answering your initial questions as we prepare to integrate our companies and move toward a bright future together.

Best regards,

Scott
